Carolina

GAZETTE.

February 12th, 1753.

[NUMB. 974.]

Mr Timothy,
If you can find room, after matters of greater importance, please to give this a place in your next Gazette.

As the season for planting is at hand, 'tis hoped the country gentlemen will not only consider the general utility, but also the particular advantage to themselves, from the cultivation of HEMP in this province. This soil is not only found by experience to be good, but as natural to it as any country in the known world, not even Arena in Italy excepted; and in strength our Hemp is preferable to any brought from the Baltic: And, for our greater encouragement, it is brought to perfection here in much less time, with less labour, and fewer hands, than Rice or Indigo, and the profits arising from it are reckoned equal, if not greater, than on either of those commodities.

It has been agreed, that this country is capable of producing many valuable commodities not yet, or but faintly, attempted to be made; but the raising of Hemp, in particular, promises, as far as any, to be greatly for our interest, as well as that of our mother country; for, the more particular branches (tending to one view) are brought to maturity, so much it serves to complete the whole for the public good: For instance, when cordage and other appurtenances for the use of navigation, may be had, at a moderate price, within ourselves, it is a great means of forwarding the building of vessels of all sorts for the sea; this consequently creates a demand for wood (and ours is held in esteem abroad) enhances the value of wood lands, introduces tradesmen, who become settlers amongst us, and adds many more links to a chain of good consequences to the province in general.

Let it be considered, that Hemp for cordage, in our mother country, is an article which her navy cannot do without; and then suppose (which however improbable, is not impossible) that the North powers may, at some time or other, be at enmity, as to exclude Great Britain commerce in the Baltic sea; is it not natural to conclude, she would not only indulge a child of her own birth, but likewise give it the preference to a stranger? That she would be pleased with its dutiful returns, and the useful fruits of its labour? And give all the encouragement possible to a manufactory to be beneficial to herself? Hence, we have no reason to doubt, but the legislature there, will favour so laudable an undertaking; and we presume, it will not be thought unworthy the attention of the legislature here.

As great quantities cannot be expected to be made here the first year, I can not conclude without observing, that Mr. Tamias Reid's rope-walk near Charles-Town, consumes at least twenty tons annually; who, I am inform'd, gives the price he has it for from England, agreeable to the quality in cleanness, &c. This is good encouragement to make a trial of that manufacture, and sufficient to make the planter a judge, whether the commodity is valuable or not.

I should not have taken this liberty, did I not flatter myself, some worthy patriot would be roused to take this important subject into consideration, and deliver it in a better light, as it justly deserves.

PUBLICUS.

London, Dec. 7. All our advices from Holland, assure, that the project to make Amsterdam a free-port, with some limitations, agreeable to the late Stadtholder's plan, will infallibly take place immediately.

According to letters from Hanover, the negotiation begun there last summer by the marquis de Campi, minister from the duke of Modena, is to be resumed when he returns to London, where the finishing hand will also be put to divers other important affairs that could not be determined at Hanover, among which they reckon the treaty with the elector palatine, about which they hope soon to agree, as the equivalent for the county of Ortnaw is the only point that remains to be settled, and as the empress-queen has lately explained herself again in very favourable terms concerning what might best form that equivalent.

Letters from Smyrna inform us, that the Grand Signior has lately sent a person, well escorted, to Bagdat, who is said to be the only surviving Grandson of Shah-Hosseini; some of the principal Khans in Persia having entered into a solemn confederacy to raise him to the throne.
